Mutations

Speed Increase (Physical): The mutant may move twice as fast as normal in times of stress, twice a day for 5 melee rounds. Allows two missile or melee attacks per round.

Radiated Eyes (Physical): The power to fire a level 10 radiation blast from the eyes. This power is limited to once every 4 melee turns and has an effective range of 10 yards.

Heightened Precision (Physical): The ability to determine weak points on opponents and structural weaknesses in material objects. Because of this mutation the mutant does an extra 2 dice of damage over and above his or her normal damage with any weapon used.

Molecular Rearrangement (Mental): This mutation can only be used infrequently. Upon using it, whether it works or not, the mutant cannot use the ability for a full day. The molecular rearrangement manifests itself as the object being turned to rubber. Up to 50lbs. of material is affected.

*Metal and dense material have 24% chance of being affected.

*Stone and nonmetal material have a 32% chance of being affected.

*Biological organisms at a 40% chance of being affected.

Mutation Defect

No Resistance to Poison (Physical): This mutation results in double damage to the mutant whenever he or she is exposed to poison.

Equipment: A small ancient box with a handle, metal arm, a boxlike thing with a metal stick protruding from it. A bag of dried purple peas, a half full bottle of water, two packets of Ranch dip.

Currency: 10⁹¹ Domars, a turquoise stone on a silver chain, bow & 12 arrows:lll

Background: You love the village and most of its mutants. You also love ancient tech since that time you stuck your arm in a box of the god-men and it was replaced by this metal arm. Flora-thotep seems especially scrumptious to you and if he ever dies you are going to eat him with ranch dip. Spider-wolf venom has weakened your resistance to most poisons. You hate spider-wolves and poison.

What you have heard about the ruined city: An old friend told you told you that the veggies in the city sometimes bite back, especially the Blood Broccoli. You've also heard of a cybernetics factory where you get more metal limbs.
